ECLIPSES.

There will be five eclipses this year; three of the Moon, and two of the Sun; as follows:

I, The first will be an Eclipse of the Moon, on the morning of the 6th of January, at 10 o'clock and 34 minutes morning, and visible in North America.

The duration of this Eclipse is 2h. 20m.; and its size, 5¼ digits on the Moon's north limb.

II. The second will be an Eclipse of the SUN, January 20th, invisible in North America. The time of Conjunction may be known by reference to the calendar. In high southern latitudes, this Eclipse will be central and annular.

III. The third will be an Eclipse of the MOON, on the evening of July 1st, at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes evening; and partly visible in North America.

The duration of this Eclipse will be 3h. 16m., and its size 10¼ digits; the Moon rises at near the middle of the Eclipse, and will, when rising, be about three-fourths immersed in the earth's shadow. The Moon will rise more or less eclipsed throughout Canada and the United States.

IV. The fourth will be an Eclipse of the SUN, begining on the evening of the 16th, and ending on the morning of the 17th of July; and invisible in North America. The time of Conjunction may be known by reference to the calendar. This Eclipse will be visible in Europe and Asia. In London it will commence a few minutes after the Sun rises, and at an hour and forty-four minutes after, the Sun will be about three-fourths covered.

V. The fifth will be an Eclipse of the MOON, on the evening of December 26th, at two o'clock and 31 minutes evening; and partly visible in North America.

The duration of this Eclipse is 3h. 38 m., and the duration of total darkness, 1h. 38m In Canada and the western part of the United States, it does not rise till after the end of total darkness; but it rises either partially or totally eclipsed, throughout the country.

1833. 1st Month, JANUARY, Begins on Tuesday.

Bleak Winter's gloomy pioneer,
Thou harbinger of woes to come,
Thou hast commenced thy dread career—
O'er the sad earth thy whirlwinds roam;
Thou art the despot of the year,
The tyrant of the fleeting clan.
For all within thy breath is sear,
E'en Nature's fairest darling—man.

Where sleeps the lover's soften'd flute
Which late was sounding on the wave?—
His sorrow-soothing pipe is mute;
It rests within the minstrel's grave:
For what avails its music now
Since dreary winter's rugged arm
Rests on Earth's solitary brow
And desolates each glowing charm.

Again, in gentle warmth, the sun's impartial beams
Expels the frost—unbinds the fettered streams ;
Gives life to herbage ; and the pleasant flower
Bursts into life and smiles away its hour ;
The cheerful bird salutes each dawnig day,
Extends his wings and skips from spray to spray,
Soars thro' the air, the clear expanse of blue,
Then drops his plumes and sips the morning dew ;

The fragrant blossoms deck the verdant trees,
And yield their freshness to each passing breeze ;
The culture fields unfold the waving grain,
Whilst sportive young are dancing o'er the plain ;
And the swift ball the raptured blow receives
Bounds in the air—or revels with the leaves.

The dream of Childhood new, without a care :
I strike the harp sweet morn of thee to sing—
Dawn of our hopes soft pleasure giving spring ;
Whose gentle rains envigorate the health,
And promise plenty—stores of Ceres' wealth.

Now have young April and the blue-ey'd May
Vanish'd awhile, and lo! the glorious June
(While nature ripens in his burning noon)
Comes like a young inheritor; and gay,
Although his parent months have pass'd away:
But his green crown shall wither, and the tune
That usher'd in his birth be silent soon,
And in the strength of youth shall he decay.

I know 'tis bright—'tis beautiful !—but yet
I ne'er could look on Autumn's golden leaf,
Her robe of changeful dye, and not regret
That vernal loveliness should be so brief.
Who sighs not over summer's fading rose ?
Although around us other flowers are wreathing,
Whose bosoms richer, gayer tints disclose,
And with whose fragrance every gale is breathing.

Still, this fair flower, to young affection dear,
If once enshrin,d within a faithful breast,
Oh, never to the heart that lov'd sincere,
Can other blossoms be as fondly pressed.
Yet when the garden's loveliness is past,
We look upon the forest's towering pride,
Which, though we know too soon must meet the blast,
We breathe a fervent wish to hope allied—

That soft Fatonial gales, with gentle breath,
And genial suns the fading scene may cheer,
Arrest awhile the chilling shafts of death,
And sigh a requium o'er the closing year!
Oh! there's desolation wild and bleak,
In winter's dread approach: our bosoms feel
A paralyzing chill, we cannot speak,
Cling round the heart—o'er all its pulses steal.

Yet there's a hope which softens grief
And stills the bosom's heaving sigh,
That thy lone empire, dark as brief,
Will soon have passed our dwellings by;—
And when the swift and rolling year
Has ended with their reign of dread,
Many will drop the gushing tear,
Not that thy day, but time hath fled.

From the Diary of a Late Physician.

THE BURIED ALIVE.

* * * * * *

I HAD been for some time ill of a low and lingering fever. My strength gradually wasted, but the sense of life seemed to become more and more acute as my corporeal powers became weaker. I could see by the looks of the doctor that he despaired of my recovery ; and the soft and whispering sorrow of my friends taught me that I had nothing to hope.

One day towards the evening the crisis took place. I was seized with a strange and indescribable quivering,—a rushing sound was in my ears,—I saw around my couch innumerable strange faces ; they were bright and visionary, and without bodies. There was light and solemnity, and I tried to move, but could not. For a short time a terrible confusion overwhelmed me ; and when it passed off, all my recollection returned with the most perfect distinctness, but the power of motion had departed. I heard the sound of weeping at my pillow, and the voice of the nurse say, "He is dead." I cannot describe what I felt at these words. I exerted my utmost power of volition to stir myself, but I could not even move an eyelid. After a short pause my friend drew near ; and sobbing and convulsed with grief, drew his hand over my face, and closed my eyes. The world was then darkened, but I still could hear, and feel, and suffer.

When my eyes were closed, I heard by the attendants that my friend had left the room, and I soon after found the undertakers were preparing to habit me in the garments of the grave. Their thoughtlessness was more awful than the grief of my friends. They laughed at one another as they turned me from side to side, and treated what they believed a corpse with the most appalling ribaldry.

When they had laid me out, these wretches retired, and the degrading formality of affected mourning commenced. For three days, a number of friends called to see me. I heard them, in low accents, speak of what I was ; and more than one touched me with his finger. On the third day some of them talked of the smell of corruption in the room.

The coffin was procured ; I was lifted and laid in : my friend placed my head on what was deemed its last pillow, and I felt his tears drop on my face.

When all who had any peculiar interest in me had for a short time looked at me in the coffin, I heard them retire ; and the undertaker's men placed the lid on the coffin, and screwed it down. There were two of them present ; one had occasion to go away before the task was done. I heard the fellow who was left begin to whistle as he turned the screw-nails ; but he checked himself, and completed the work in silence.

I was then left alone,—every one shunned the room. I knew, however, that I was not yet buried ; and though darkened and motionless, I had still hope ; but this was not permitted long. The day of interment arrived—I felt the coffin lifted and borne away—I heard and felt it placed in the hearse. There was a crowd of people around ; some of them spoke sorrowfully of me. The hearse began to move —I knew that it carried me to the grave. It halted, and the coffin was taken out—I felt myself carried on shoulders of men, by the inequality of the motion.—A pause ensued —I heard the cords of the coffin moved—I felt it swing as dependent by them—It was lowered, and rested on the bottom of the grave—The cords were dropped upon the lid—I heard them fall. Dreadful was the effort I then made to exert the power of action, but my whole frame was immoveable.

Soon after, a few handfuls of earth were thrown upon the coffin. Then there was another pause—after which the shovel was employed, and the sound of the rattling mould, as it covered me, was far more tremendeous than thunder. But I could make no effort. The sound gradually became less and less, and by a surging reverberation in the coffin, I knew that the grave was filled up, and that the sexton was treading in the earth, slapping the grave with the flat of his spade. This too ceased, and then all was silent.

I had no means of knowing the lapse of time ; and the silence continued. This is death, thought I, and I am doom-
